

LET'S CUT THE RED TAPE

Virginia's 40-year-old COPN law was designed to keep costs down, however, the law has increased costs, supported monopolies and intentionally limited access to needed medical services.

Virginia's COPN law artificially protects hospitals from competition, giving some virtual monopolies on certain technologies and treatments.

Virginia's COPN law puts government bureaucrats — not doctors and hospitals — in charge of deciding what options for medical care patients have.

Virginia is the 12th most populous state yet it ranks in the bottom third of all states to treat patients overnight.

The time for reform is now so Virginians have access to a 21st Century health system.
